PEACE NEAR IN STRIKE; LABOR WINS DEMANDS

President's Plan Is Admitted Failure; Effort Was Futile

OPERATORS LOSE

Conference Is Called; Companies Ready To Concede To Miners

CLEVELAND, O., July 29. — Peace in the union coal fields of the United States after a four months strike which has brot the nation to the brink of its worst fuel famine, is near at hand, prominent operators told International News Service today. Within a short time, possibly early within the next week a joint conference representing a "majority of the tonnage" in the old central competitive field, consisting of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, will meet with the scale committee of the United Mine Workers of America, and arrange the basis of the settlement.

Not all operators will be present or represented at this meeting, it was admitted, and the tonnage represented in some of the fields may be small, but it is thot certain that all operators employing union miners will accept the result, in view of the generally recognized futility of efforts to mine coal by the use of strike breakers.

The invitation of President Harding to resume mining, under the protection of state or federal troops has been barren of results, and it is now generally admitted that the only way to get soft coal to avert a famine that will result in serious suffering and bring reviving industry to the brink of chaos, is to make an agreement satisfactory to the organized miners.

The order books of coal operators here and at other points in the central field, it is learned, are filled with orders and customers are clamoring for coal. Operators can see before them several months of profitable business, and also realize that unless some voluntary steps are taken very soon to end the fuel famine, the government will step in and operate the mines.

The original date set for the assembling of the joint conference was today, but delay in reaching an agreement is responsible for a slight postponement. President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, is represented as having increased his demands, as to the amount of tonnage to be represented, thus necessitating additional negotiations among the operators themselves.

HARDING PLANS TO AVERT RECURRENCE OF TWIN STRIKES

Question Is To Hit A Fair Balance Between Capital And Labor

NO ACTION NOW

Leaders Await Settlement Of Rail Dispute Before Acting

WASHINGTON, July 29. — President Harding is in complete accord with the senate today in the view that legislation must be enacted as speedily as possible to prevent a recurrence of the coal and railroad strikes. Altho Republican and Democratic senators entertain conflicting opinions as to the form the proposed legislation should take, they agree with the president that congress must provide an immediate and lasting remedy for the existing industrial situation.

The desire the president expressed to Senator Borah, chairman of the senate labor committee, that the settlement of the railroad tie up be made to harmonize with prospective legislation, intended to avert future strikes of railroad workers, met with Borah's approval.

Senator Cummins, Republican, Iowa, chairman of the senate interstate commerce commission, believes that the president will not only consult both Republican and Democratic leaders of congress regarding the remedial legislation he has in mind, but that he will make it the subject of a special message to congres sbefore long. Cummins and other Republican leaders are convinced that the big issue at the next session of congress will be legislation embracing the entire coal and railroad situation. Cummins is not alone in the senate in agreeing that "teeth" should be put into the transportation law and the railroad labor board given power to enforce its decisions, but it is pointed out that it is one thing to decide to insert "teeth" in legislation and another thing to agree as to what kind of "teeth" should be used.

Cummins said he had no intention of proposing any amendments to the transportation act at this time, or until after a definite announcement that the railroad strike was settled had been made, altho he was evolving a plan for the establishment of the principle of the living wage which he hoped to have incorporated in the law as the basis for fixing wages by the railroad labor board. The chief difficulty in successfully sponsoring an amendment to the act, he explained, was that a flood of other amendments was certain to burst upon congress and the demand that the law be repealed entirely, or section 15-A—its guaranty clause—and others of its disputed provisions stricken from it, be renewed.

EXHIBITORS AND CENSORS SELECT JOINT COMMITTEE

COLUMBUS, July 29. — Appointment of a committee representing movie men of the state to co-operate with the state board of censors in ironing out any disagreements that may arise was approved at a conference of Ohio movie exhibitors and distributors with state Director of Education Riegel. The committee will be selected soon.

"Intelligent censorship is the aim," Director Riegel said. Riegel declared the board expects to play fair with the movie men and "I feel it is not asking too much in requesting that this attitude be mutual."

Co-operation was assured Riegel by the movie men.

BUSINESS WILL BOOM WHEN THE STRIKERS WORK

Roger Rabson Predicts Rush Of Orders In Retail Lines

PRICES TO RISE

Trend Will Again Be Downward After The First Rise

WELLESLEY HILLS, Mass., July 29—Discussing the possible effect of the rail and mine strikes on prices in general subsequent to settlement of the industrial disputes, Roger W. Badson, statistician, made the following statement today:

"The strikes have naturally put a damper on business. They have a disheartening effect on producers, jobbers and retailers. Wage workers have less to spend and manufacturers are less interested in pushing their business. All of this tends to hold up trade in general. Yet, during this period of strikes people are living, eating and dressing just as if no strikes existed. Houses are deteriorating, young folks are getting married, children are being born, clothes are wearing out, and merchandise in general is being consumed. If deterioration and consumption were suspended during the depression of labor strikes, then strikes might be good for the country at times. Unfortunately however, the deterioration and consumption go on even tho the retail purchases decline.

"This means that after strikes are settled there is a general rush to buy. The wage workers when returning to work again feel prosperous. They and their families rush to the stores and purchase goods. The group of industries which have been involved in the strike immediately receive an avalanche of orders. They in turn feel prosperous and order new machinery and quantities of supplies. This

LARR ASKS CUSTODY OF CHILD NOW WITH MOTHER IN TOLEDO

The modification of a divorce decree obtained by his former wife, Marie E. Cox, is asked by James Larr in a petition filed in common pleas court, so that he may have the custody of their one child, Gerald C. Larr, aged 8.

The plaintiff says he and the defendant were married June 23, 1911, and that on February 11, 1921 the defendant obtained a decree giving her the custody of their child. The court order permitted the child to visit him and while with him at Toledo on the Fourth of July, the boy fell, broke his left arm and ruptured the ligaments in his shoulder, according to the plaintiff's petition.

It is necessary for the boy to remain there for treatment now, Larr says.

In the meantime, according to the petition, his former wife married Charles Cox, who has three children by former marriage. The plaintiff believes that he can provide a better home for his child, under the existing conditions than that of his former wife, and asks that he be given the custody of the child. He is represented by George D. Klein.

STATES MUST STOP COAL PROFITEERS, SEC. HOOVER RULES

WASHINGTON, July 29. — The burden of checking coal profiteers for the period of the national emergency will be largely placed upon the individual states under plans for coal rationing announced today by Secretary of Commerce Hoover.

The federal government is going to see, he said, that the coal is properly distributed to the states that need it, but once it has passed over state lines, then the distribution of coal passes to the hands of the state commissions which most states are setting up to co-operate with the national coal administration.

INDUSTRIES MUST FILE APPLICATIONS FOR COAL SUPPLY

Fuel Comm. To Direct Shipments When Priority Is Declared

COLUMBUS, July 29. — That all coal shipments originating within Ohio prior to the action of the interstate commerce commission, declaring existence of a national emergency by reason of the coal and rail strikes, will be permitted to move to their destinations is the belief voiced here today by state Fuel Administrator Poor.

Hereafter Ohioans desiring coal, probably, will be required to make application to the state fuel commission here. If the application is approved, it will be forwarded to the federal coal distribution commission at Washington, D. C., it was stated. Priority orders providing for such shipments would then be issued by the federal authorities.

Each applicant for fuel will be directed to fill out a blank listing present stock on hand; average daily consumption for one month; number of cars required per day for current use; name and location of mine shipping the coal; name of consignee; destination and purpose for which coal will be used.

Accompanying this information must be a certificate stating that the coal is not to be used for storage, exchange or selling purposes.

Traffic managers of the chambers of commerce of various cities, thruout the state, will co-operate with the state fuel commission, by keeping in close touch with the needs of the community, and will investigate local claims.

Officials from Mansfield and Lima chambers of commerce wired Administrator Poor today, offering to co-operate during the emergency period.

"The state fuel commission feels as tho it is free to call on the chambers of commerce, or any other public bodies thruout Ohio for information," Administrator Poor declared. "People have not become quite fully aware of the situation at this early period." Chairman Poor asserted. Co-operation, however, is being shown by the coal consumers, who have already filed requests."

The state fuel commission today received the following request from Secretary of Commerce Hoover:

"We should like to receive from your organization at the earliest moment, the amount of coal now in stock in the state: First, in the hands of public utilities; second, governmental institutions; third, wholesalers, fourth, retailers; fifth, larger industries.

"Also an estimate of the weekly consumption of public utilities and governmental institutions; householders and industries. We will direct supplies of railway coal from Washington."

BRILLHART SUES PENNSY FOR $1,400 ACCIDENT DAMAGES

Says View Of Isleta Crossing Was Obstructed by Depot

A suit for the collection of $1,400 damages from the P. C. C. & St. L. railroad has been filed in common pleas court by B. Carl Brillhart, traveling salesman, as the outcome of an accident which occurred at the Isleta crossing this spring.

Brillhart's automobile was completely demolished when struck by Pennsy train No. 7 and he was thrown a distance of 100 feet, according to the petition.

He says the view of the track is obstructed at this point by the defendant company's station, an orchard and an embankment. The train was late, according to the plaintiff, and was going at an excessive rate of speed. He says no warning signal was given by the train before it reached the Isleta crossing.

For the destruction of his automobile he asks $700, damages in the amount of $500 for the nervous shock which he suffered, and $200 to cover the expense of medical attention, rest and care.

He is represented by the firm of Shepler & Burklew, and T. H. Wheeler.

Charges of intoxication have been placed against Murdock, Gartside and McCallah. In addition Murdock is charged with striking and wounding Mrs. Bussard and Gartside is charged with disturbing the peace.

Mayor W. S. Tish said Saturday evening that none of the four men would be arraigned before Monday morning.

AMERICA'S PLACE IN THE SUN IS WON NOT BY FORCE OF ARMS BUT BY SKILLFUL DIPLOMACY

Quiet Settlement of the Mandates Issue in Our Favor Means That We Will Not be Shut Out of Large Parts of the Earth by the Empires—Truly American Policy of the "Open Door," on Which Wilson Finally Relied and Which Hughes Has Carried Out, Now Will be Applied to the Territory Conquered from Germany—Our Action Binds Us in No Way to the Imperial System But Breaks That Idea by Opening Backward Countries to All Peoples

By EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, July 29—So quietly that only a few bubbles and ripples have appeared on the surface of the supposedly calm sea of diplomacy, America has accomplished an earthquake or undersea volcanic eruption in world politics which will for generations, if not for centuries, affect all the hidden currents of statesmanship, even as the eruption of undersea volcanoes in recent years is believed to have turned the current of the Gulf stream.

I wager that few of our people have paid serious attention to the announcements from London and Paris that the League of Nations Council has come to an agreement with the Washington administration on the terms of the mandates which are to govern the future of the territories taken from Germany. Yet nothing which was decided by the four years of deadly struggle in Europe is of more importance to the future of mankind.

Imperialism has surrendered at last to Democracy. The backward countries are not the spoil of the first strong nation which shall plant its flag in them and terrorize and exploit the inhabitants. Such lands are the trust of all mankind, even as Mr. Wilson said they were, and as Mr. Hughes afterwards insisted they were—and the United States hereafter is to be in position of seeing that they are treated in that fashion. In other words we have won our "place in the sun" and a place for all other democracies as well.

Long Diplomatic Battle

Little has been revealed to us yet about the specific terms on which the settlement has been made between Washington and the leaders of the league. London and Paris have simply said the question has been settled in a manner to satisfy America and Washington has added next to nothing. But those who have followed the dispute which began in the Paris peace conference can readily supply the rest of the story. America has more than

HARDING PLAN FOR PEACE DENOUNCED BY RY. EXECUTIVE

Roads Consider Offer Concession To Labor, Says Chief

TO MEET TUESDAY

Seniority Main Problem; "Scabs" Promised Steady Work

NEW YORK, July 29—The impression grew in eastern railway circles today that the meeting here Tuesday of the 148 railway presidents of the United States called to consider President Harding's peace plan for settlement of the shop strike will develop sharp warfare between peace and war factions.

Reports reaching the office of John G. Walber, chief of the "intelligence department," of the Association of Eastern Railway Executives, are far more warlike than peaceful.

One general manager of a big eastern system, whose name is withheld, is said to have threatened to resign with practically his entire supervisory staff, if his president agrees to the Harding peace plan, which is considered by the railroads.

Another general manager, again nameless, arrived in New York today, after a tour of the chief division points of his system, during which he made speeches warning members of other unions conducting or contemplating strike votes, "do not vote for a strike unless you intend to go out, for nothing will be done to prevent a strike."

Walber's department is the clearing house of all statistical argument intended for presentation to the federal railway board in the various wages controversies. It is a listening post in the rail war. Walber declares that nothing has come to his ear since the publication of the President's peace proposal to indicate that the big eastern chiefs are any more inclined to compromise on the seniority question today than they were a week ago, before president Harding had intervened.

"The fragmentary peace outline which has been made public presupposes, in the first place, that the railroads can reabsorb all who walked out and at the same time retain the new men taken on," Walber declared today. "There is not enough shop work to permit this. And I know that during the past few days railway managers on many roads have personally, or by deputy, renewed their pledges to the men now in the shops that their jobs are secure, that they have been taken on on a permanent basis. The proposal of a rehearing by the labor board is opposed because voluntary rehearing by the board arouses an idea in the minds of the strikers that the board will do something better for them. If the new decision is not an improvement over the old—from labor's point of view—the unrest and ill feeling is needlessly increased."

Eastern rail heads, presidents and general managers, already are arriving in New York and are conferring informally

LOCAL MEN PLAN NOVEL BUSINESS

The prospects for a root and herb business in Coshocton is being considered by W. C. Greene and C. S. Aronhalt of Coshocton Route 4, it was learned Saturday.

Greene and Aronhalt were in New York city Saturday investigating the condition of the herb market there, and they are planning to raise medicinal roots on a farm on the Coshocton-Plainfield-rd, it is said

Before returning to their farm here they will go to North Carolina, Greene's former home, at which time he will dispose of property there, and arrange to make his permanent home here.

MRS. LAKE LEAVES TO TAKE NEW POST IN PA. HOSPITAL

Mrs. Goldie Lake, former matron of the City hospital, left Coshocton on an early morning train for Mt. Pleasant, Pa., where she has obtained the position of superintendent of the Memorial hospital.

Mrs Lake's departure automatically restores peace between the factions of the hospital and medical profession, which were engaged in a verbal war of which she was the objective. Some sought to displace her as matron, others to retain her. After a long, under-the-surface fight, Mrs. Lake handed in her resignation to the city service director, in the interests of harmony.

Her successor has not been chosen.

War And The Next Generation

PERSONS opposed to war, including, it is said, some millions in the United States, will take part in an international demonstration today. Beginning as an almost spontaneous protest in a few cities in Europe two years ago, the movement has spread until it is almost world-wide.

In the mean time the announcement is made that more than 35,000 young men have jumped at the chance to get military training this summer in the civilian camps conducted by the War Department. The total number of applicants will undoubtedly exceed 50,000, tho there is room for only a little more than half that number.

These 50,000 young men are not necessarily demonstrating a liking for war; there are excellent personal reasons for going to camp and learning how to stand up straight, keep your mouth shut, and do what you are told. Nevertheless, their response should serve to remind us how rapidly the parade of the generations moves by, and what folly it is to expect that the remembered horrors of the last war will help to prevent the next one. Five years ago most of the young men of the proper age for Plattsburg training knew all about military drill. Today there is a whole fresh crop of youngsters who have not tasted the iron bitterness of war and have no personal opinion about it one way or the other.

Many soldiers announcedwhen demobilized that they were thru; that they would decline the invitation to defend the country on another occasion. The plain truth is that such an invitation would not be extended to a large part of them even if hostilities broke out tomorrow. The experience of one generation must be codified and made effective immediately if it is to be of any use to the next.

William Vs. Henry

WHEN Governor Henry Allen of Kansas and Editor William Allen White of Emporia disagreed regarding the application of Henry's anti-picketing law to the strike placard in William's front shop window it seemed as tho a great friendship were about to be shattered. Henry and William had been thru the war zone together in 1918. William had supported Henry for governor and was ready in 1920 to support him as a candidate for the presidency.

Altho a progressive, and sometimes almost a radical, William stood for Henry's compulsory arbitration law, and is even said to have had some part in framing it. Of the two, Henry, with his industrious press bureau in Topeka, his political machine, and his large-sounding generalizations about subjects of which he knew none too much, was the more successful in a worldly way, but William had the finer soul.

A complete break between them would have been bad for Henry and probably bad for Kansas. As matters stand, Henry and William have just eaten chicken and dumplings together in the White home in Emporia, and William has agreed to obey Henry's law while waiting for the courts to decide whether or not it takes away the constitutional guarantee of free speech.

Henry's explanation, as it happens, is rather lame. William, he concedes, had the right to put in his window a placard stating his attitude toward the railway strike, but the placard he actually did put in his window constituted a breach of the Kansas law because it was "a form of intimidation." "The only time 'Old Bill' is dangerous," he said, "is when he sits down at his double-action typewriter and writes out his emotions at a time like this. When Bill White put that card in the window of his office he became dangerous to the peace of the state because of the faith we have in him, in his good purposes and his potential leadership."

If Henry pursued this phase of the subject any further the despatches do not record it, but he might have added that the reason Kansas people have faith in William Allen White is that he always does say what he thinks when he thinks it ought to be said. The Kansas law works out as an attempt to forbid free speech for White and every one else at the very time when the free speech of honest men is most needed.

In this respect, at least, it is a bad law, and it is to be hoped that the old friendship between William and Henry will not prevent William from sticking to his guns and proving it a bad law even if he has to carry it to the United States Supreme Court.

One Way To Wreck A Party

IF the Senate majority were deliberately trying to wreck the Harding administration they could not have chosen a more effective instrument than the McCumber tariff nor a more effective clause in that tariff than that devoted to wool. Thursday's vote of 43 to 22 indicated that the attempts of Lenroot and a few other Republican senators to save their party from its folly are doomed to failure.

Yet Senator Lenroot is the most moderate of men. The rates he wishes to see imposed, he stated, are "such as will be sustained and indorsed by the American people," and the rates to which he objects are those which "will result in a Democratic congress next year, and a Democratic President in 1924, with a return to free wool and a repetition of the suffering and the hardships the farmers have endured in the past Democratic administration." Even those who do not share his solicitude for the Republican party, or who are more concerned about the price of clothes than about the particular set of politicians who happen to be spitting hairs in Congress at a particular moment, should admit the force of Senator Lenroot's argument.

According to Senator McCumber the duty on wool in the Senate bill is "considerably less" than that fixed in the Aldrich bill of 1909. Inasmuch as the Aldrich bill was one of the most corrupt and least defensible ever passed in the United States a "considerable" difference might seem no more than fair. But the fact is that the bill fixes a duty of approximately 33 cents a pound upon scoured wool and higher or corresponding duties upon wool in nearly every other condition, and the assertion of Senator Walsh that it will impose a direct tax of about $73,000,000 has not been disproved. Senator Walsh goes further, with considerable plausibility, has asserts that the total tax paid by the consumer will amount to at least $200,000,000.

Senator Bursum of New Mexico, an ardent defender of the higher rates, blurted out last week in response to a question on the floor, that he "figured" the bill would give wool growers 10 per cent. on their investment and that the committee "thot" they ought to have it." This substantial guarantee is asked for an indusry which has not been able to increase its total output perceptibly during the past forty years, even under high protection, and which is producing at the present moment less than half the wool consumed in the United States.

There is not the least indication that the domestic wool growers can meet the domestic demand. What is proposed, as the Senate debate clearly indicates, is a subsidy, and the only presentable argument advanced in its defense is that the farmer who grows the wool will probably be cheated out of all but a few cents of his proper share of it.

As it happens, more voters consume wool than are engaged (except in a purely figurative sense) in producing it. Of this striking truth the Republican Old Guard will doubtless be reminded in the fall.

New York Day-By-Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, July 29.—Each community has its variant of the old theme in De Maupassant's story of the lost necklace. This is the story—and it is true—of the adventure of an internationally famous beauty who visited a Fifth Avenue shop that deals with imitation jewels.

She wanted to select a type of earrings just now a fad. After inspecting a tray of them she made her selection and asked the price. The clerk replied "five-fifty." Then inquired if Madam wished a blank check. She said with a smile that she carried that much and laid down $5.50.

The clerk explained with proper embarrassment that she had made a mistake and in the confusion the lady left $5.50 and went to her bank where she drew $50 and returned to the shop.

Again the clerk gave an apologetic cough and explained that the lady had misunderstood, that the price was $550.00. Having gone this far with the transaction the lady saw nothing to do but tender a check for the balance which she did.

"You know," she said just a bit haughtily, "I have never worn imitation jewels and I had no idea about the price. I never dreamed they were so expensive."

The clerk was puzzled and after looking at a necklace about her throat said: "Surely Madam knows that the necklace she now wears is imitation and came from this shop." She was furious and avowed she had been insulted.

The manager was called, the circumstances explained to him and he accompanied the lady to the leading jewel expert in the city where, after an examination, the necklace was declared to be spurious.

And Puff! went another romance that is exciting the gossip weeklies. The necklace was given to the celebrated beauty by a very rich man upon his return from Europe. It was in the case of a famous Paris jeweler. The other day the beauty returned the necklace to the donor with this note: "Take this to any pawnshop. You may be able to get a couple of marbles and a skipping rope for it."

These are busy days for the little dog hotel in the Fifties with so many dog owners trotting off to the seaside and to Europe. The dog hotel are so difficult to keep. One sends his pet there and is assured of the best attention. There is an office with a clerk on duty and the dogs are registered. Each has its private kennel and there is an open space in the rear where the guests may romp. A veterinarian is on donstant duty. The charge is from $1 to $3 a day, according to the size of the quarters. The food is especially prepared and dogs that are to remain there for six weeks may take a course of training for an extra fee which makes them much more polite. The proprietor says the bull dog is the easiest to handle and the most difficult is the chow.

Up to the minute sign on a Broadway movie theatre: "Park your flapper here for the evening!"

Along toward dawn one of those pink-jowled satyric Buddhas sat alone at his table in a midnight supper club. He puffed in meditative reflection at a long, black cigar. A waiter fidgeted near him with the check. "We close, sir, at sun up," ventured the serving man. "Oh," said the rounder, "does the sun still come up?"

HOURS OF REST

Tired Father to his home repairs from labors in the mart, where he has climbed nine miles of stairs, until he broke his heart. That organ, in his manly chest, will be a total loss until long hours of healing rest he's safely put across. And if his wife is good and wise she'll grant him his repose, nor order him to swat the flies or wield the garden hose. Too often home turns out a fake because of endless chores; the man who earns the bread and cake can't saw off peaceful snores. "The chicken house is full of cracks," he hears the housewife say; "so take a lantern and an ax and fix them right away." Far better burn the chicken pen with every roost and nest, than worry thus the stricken man who only yearns for rest. "The kitchen roof, when torrents pour, lets all the water through," the wife proceeds, "and our front door is badly out of true." Ah, better let the old roof leak, the doors be hard to close, than bore a man who's worn and weak, whose muscles need repose. Let peace enshroud the aching dome when comes the close of day, for he who brings the bacon home should have the right of way.

BAVARIAN PREMIER ORDERED TO BRING STATE AID LINE

BERLIN, July 29—A special courier, bearing a letter to Count Lerchenfeldt, Premier of Bavaria, which had been written by President Ebert's own hand, was speeding towards Munich today. Upon the Bavarian reply to this communication officials of the Central government were pinning their hopes of a peaceful settlement of the threatened Bavarian situation. It was expected that the note would be delivered some time during the afternoon.

It is learned that President Ebert's letter points to the grave situation which has been created in "outright violation of the German constitution." It declared furthermore for the restoration of the legal unity of the confederation of German states. The letter is understood to leave the choice of the way towards such restoration to the Bavarians themselves.

Before the communication was addressed it was unanimously approved by the Berlin cabinet.

There was widespread opinion today that Bavaria will climb down as gracefully as possible.

PRESIDENT IGNORES CIVIL SERVICE RULE TO PROMOTE GIRL

WASHINGTON, July 29—Miss Elsie M. Robertson, 16 year-old-office messenger in the department of agriculture today is a full-fledged clerk in the government service thru friendly intervention of President Harding.

Three years ago Miss Robertson was appointed a messenger in the agriculture department. Her excellent work and winning personality soon won her a place in the hearts of her superiors and associates. Recently her father died, leaving her the sole support of her widowed mother and four brothers and sisters.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was informed of this and he became interested in the girl. She was granted a "try-out" on some clerical work and arquitted herself with suuh credit that Secretary Wallace asked the president to promote her. But there is a rule against the promotion of a messenger girl to a hierkship, which the civil service commission refused to set aside, asserting that there was a long list of women entitled to promotion before the girl. But President Harding made the appointment notwithstanding the rule, and now Elsie is a full fledged government clerk.

Rope from ships that have sailed the Seven seas—that has been tied to every port in the world—ends its career by guarding the nation's telephone conversation. From junk rope is made the high grade paper which insulates every wire in a piece of telephone cable. What Would People Do Without Ice?

IF ICE delivery stopped for a single day during hot weather, what would happen?

Food would spoil, health would be endangered, baby's milk would be imperiled, sick people would suffer, well people would swelter. Life would be a very different thing for a day.

Ice, water, gas, electric light, are such everyday enjoyments of the average household that people seldom think about them, what a boon they are, how easily they might be interrupted, how much effort, money and foresight are invested in their safe and sure delivery.

The ice dealer has as big a responsibility as the electric light plant in safeguarding public welfare.

Will you find today any car that even approaches Essex in quality and ability, within hundreds of dollars of its cost?

And doesn't its low cost with such quality appeal to judicious buyers, whether they are considering a car slightly less in cost, or have been seeking Essex quality in some much costlier car?

Names Naval Adviser

Intimate Glimpses of William Penn.

In the diary of Samuel Pepys one has frequent glimpses of Sir William Penn, the admiral. Pepys, who also was connected with the royal navy, did not like the other man, whom he at one time alludes to as a "base raskall." The two families were neighbors and apparently intimate, for we find that at the marriage of Pegg Penn, William's sister, "they borrowed many things from my kitchen for dressing the dinner." The sister evidently was not of the Quaker faith, for Pepys says: "The wedding was just before Lent, and so in vain to make new clothes till Easter that they might see the fashions as they are to be this summer." Another entry describes having to dance Sir Windam and his son, at which he gives them lessons cooked in three different ways, adding: "We were as merry as I could be in that company." A state of mind, no doubt, caused by rivalry.

The Things Worth While.

Education is the calling forth of all those qualities by which man is distinguished. It is "proficiency in living." What must be Methuselah's joy the man of seventy, who, however recalling his part well? Only the recollection of how far he had displayed in intercourse with his fellowmen those qualities with which true education is concerned—love of God, Love of hatred, fellowship, service to the community.—The Friend (London).

PEGGY LEARNS SOMETHING NEW.

ONE day as little Peggy strolled along the edge of the swamp, she spied some beautiful flowers blooming out among the cat-tails.

"Oh, I wonder what they can be!" she mused. She tried to get closer to them, but the ground was so soft it wouldn't hold her weight.

"Well, if——" she began, when the very object of her wish stood at her side and Peggy caught hold of his hand and danced for joy as she exclaimed:

"Oh, Squeedee! I was just going to wish for you this very second. What are those beautiful flowers?"

"My goodness!" Squeedee laughed. "If it isn't a Rose-mallow Castle, as sure as I'm alive," and before Peggy could ask any questions they were out so close to the beautiful flower castle that Peggy could reach out and touch the lovely pink petals.

At first there seemed to be no one at home, but when Squeedee called, the little blossom keeper, himself, appeared.

"I don't believe I've ever seen your castle before. It is very beautiful," Peggy said. "But why do you choose such an out-of-the-way place to bloom? I should think you could pick out some one's garden and build there."

"Perhaps we wouldn't have the water to bathe," replied the keeper of Rose-mallow Castle. "You see, the rose-mallows have a great mission in life and if we bloomed where folks could get us too easily, we'd never be able to do our duty."

"How strangely you talk!" Peggy exclaimed. "I never heard of flowers doing anything but——"

"Feeding the bees and birds," interrupted the keeper of Rose-mallow Castle. "You are not too old to learn. Why, we not only appeal to the eyes of folks as a beautiful flower, but we appeal to their taste also."

Rose-mallow is a cousin of Mistress Hollyhock," Squeedee explained. "But instead of blooming just to please the eye, as does her cousin, Mistress Rose-mallow does more useful."

"I see that we are," said the keeper of Rose-mallow Castle. "You probably won't believe what I say is true just the same, but in China the women use the [illegible] to paint black the eyebrows. And in the West Indies, so I've told, they make it into a paste for blacking shoes. Now, what do you think of that?"

"I don't blame you for feeling proud," said Peggy. "Indeed, it must be wonderful to feel that you have a place in this great world."

"Even if it is a black spot," laughed the keeper of Rose-mallow Castle, and he plucked off a beautiful blossom and gave it to Peggy.

Then it became and told her daddy about the keeper of Rose-mallow Castle and the flower. He told Peggy that it was a true

WILLIAMS DENOUNCES CAMPAIGN ALLIANCE OF WETS AND DRYS

COLUMBUS, July 28.—Announcement that in coming speeches, he will "denounce the alliance between the anti-saloon league of Ohio and the pro-saloon league of Cincinnati as the most infamous combination of the present campaign," was made here today by Daniel Williams, Jackson, a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor.

"Politics, indeed, makes strange bedfellows," Mr. Williams said. "The way the saloon element of Cincinnati has tied up with the anti-saloon league furnished an excellent example of that old truth.

"Hynicka has sought to cover his tracks by saying there is no wet and-dry issue in the election. There is just enough truth in this to make it dangerous. There is no state wet and dry issue. Prohibition is a matter of national law which no state can change. But there is a wet and-dry issue in Cincinnati and Hynicka knows it. It is because Cincinnati is not dry.

"The most casual visitor in Cincinnati can get a glass of beer, if he wants it. True, he will regret it later, for the beer is not what it should be. But beer is sold in Cincinnati and more or less openly. Everybody knows it. No police officer thinks of arresting a man for selling beer.

"In the view of the wet men, this Cincinnati situation should be maintained. But a law enforcing governor could do many things to make Cincinnati a dry town. And if Cincinnati were closed up Hynicka's prestige would suffer. His control might be overthrown. The wise politician would take no such chances.

"The anti saloon league may be right in endorsing Col. Thompson and others, including myself. Hynicka may be right in endorsing Thompson. But certainly they're not both right, for the league is dry and Hynicka is wet and no man, not even Col Thompson can be both wet and dry. The only way to tell which he is, is to decide which is the more astute politician, Rud Hynicka or the man at the head of the league," said Mr. Williams.

WILLIAMS PROTESTS STATE COMMISSIONS' JUDICIARY POWERS

LIMA, O., July 28. — Strenuous protest against "usurpation of judiciary powers by Ohio commissions" was voiced today by Daniel Williams, of Jackson, a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor in addresses at Bellefontaine and Lima. Asserting that simplification of the commission system and a general shearing of judicial powers constitute one of his prime planks, Mr. Williams said that commissions operating too much along star chamber lines, are due for shake ups if he is elected governor.

"The commissions are all right in their places, but their powers should not extend to the point of making them a court of last appeal. When courts lose the last say, we are heading toward injustice and trouble."

MAN MURDERED IN RESTAURANT; WOMAN HELD FOR SLAYING

CLEVELAND, O., July 27—"Don't mind him, he's drunk. I did it," this remark, said to have been made by Mrs. Mabel C. Champion as she was attempting to escape with her husband, following the fatal shooting of Thomas A. O'Connell, in a Euclid av restaurant yesterday morning, was overheard by George Linn, a watchman at the Keith theatre, according to a statement issued by Captain of Detectives George Mattowitz today. It will figure largely in the murder charge against the woman. It was definitely established this morning by the words of Mrs. O'Connell and an army comrade that the correct name of the murdered man is Thomas Albert O'Connell. His home address is Heywood, Conn., and his father is believed to be a deputy sheriff there.

When arraigned on the charge of first degree murder this morning, Mrs. Chapman asked and was granted a continuance to August first in order to engage counsel. She was also granted permission to interview her husband.

With the arrival of George O'Connell, a brother, from New Haven, Conn., today, police expect to establish some of the hidden details in the Cleveland restaurant murder, when Thomas A. O'Connell, of New Haven, operator of carnival concessions, was killed. Mrs. Mabel C. Chapman, alias Mrs. Mabel Barnett, alias Inez Parker, alias "Teddy" O'Brien, and said to be wanted by police in a dozen cities on various charges, is held on a charge of murder, while her husband, A. F. Champion, is held as a material witness.

BRITISH MINERS FAIL TO ASSIST AMERICAN STRIKE

LONDON, July 29—The executive committee of the British Federation of Miners today decided not to take any action to assist the striking American coal miners pending possible action by the International Federation convention at Frankfort, on August 6.

At least one million tons of coal have been ordered by the United States from the British Isles. British coal prices are skyrocketing. Freight traffic on railways feeding the Welsh, English and Scotch coal fields is double what it was six weeks ago.

Colliery owners and miners have been negotiating for the establishing of three daily shifts to increase production to meet the American demand. The heavy orders from South America as well as from North America, have caused considerable congestion in some of the coal fields.

WOMAN IN DIPLOMATIC SERVICE MUST NOT WED, SAYS NEW APPOINTEE

LONDON, July 28—If a woman wishes to enter the diplomatic service and succeed she must give up all thoughts of marriage, according to Mlle. Nadeida Stancioff, daughter of the Bulgarian minister to Great Britain, who has just been appointed first secretary to the Bulgarian legation in Washington.

"Matrimony and diplomacy do not mix," said Mlle Stancioff today. "I believe that my appointment is a victory for womankind. The day is near at hand when women will be doing every kind of work, manual, intellectual, that man does. The differences between women and men are rapidly disappearing. They are becoming more and more alike in every way.

"If a woman wishes to succeed as a diplomat she must remain single. I have made up my mind to do so. It is not a question of desire but of expediency. The chief factor of the issue is nationality.

"As I realize that I have been chosen to explore this new field, I can not help but feel very happy and shy. I know that because I am a woman men will expect more of me than of a man. They will think to find in me more balance, more acuteness, more old head on young shoulders.'

For of course an exception has to be an exception. I shall do my best. Perhaps a woman is better able to bring the human touch into diplomacy than a man. It may be even easier in America—the land of philanthropists.

"Diplomacy has undergone a change since the war. No longer can the charge be made that they merely flit from one country to another making official reports. Now a days a diplomat must study the country in which he is living to learn ways of benefitting his home land."

MICHIGAN GOVERNOR SENDS SHARP REPLY TO PRES. HARDING

LANSING, Mich., July 28—Emergency action today, not legislation at some future time, is required to avert serious results in the coal and rail strike situation in Michigan, Governor Groesbeck told President Harding in a sharp letter today. He was replying to the President's letter in which Mr. Harding disclaimed authority to take summary action for relief of famine stricken districts.

"I do not know of any means of settling it under the legal authority which are possessed by either state or federal government," the president's letter declared. "Manifestly legislation must be provided and I am going to submit the whole problem to congress at the earliest consistent time possible after the house reassembles.

"I do not know whether you have the persuasive power to effect a voluntary arrangement in Michigan. I am not acquainted with your laws, but I think it is fair to assume that you could not enforce such an arrangement."

MICHIGAN WANTS COAL, NOT TALK, GROESBECK SAYS

LANSING, MICH., July 28 — Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, has challenged the federal government today to supply Michigan with coal. In a message to Herbert Hoover the governor promises the federal government use of all state agencies in enforcement of provisions for coal distribution to prevent profiteering.

"It is all fine talk" said the governor this morning, "but what Michigan wants is the coal."

FARM YOUNGSTERS TO LEARN HOW TO CAMP

It's New To Most Of Them, And They Like It; Nine Counties Set Up Tents

Hundreds of Ohio farm youngsters will spend their first night out of doors during the next four weeks. Four county club camps that were held last summer under the direction of the State agricultural extension service have introduced into many rural communities knowledge of an outdoor sport entirely new to them and the demand for more camps has been such that nine will be held this year.

Leaders in the work discover that many farm children, probably a majority, spend all their young days in the country without once experiencing the delights of camping out. They discover also that when country kids are given the chance to camp, they take to it like ducks to water.

This year's camps will follow last year's plan. Groups will vary in size from about 40 to 125. Boys and girls who faithfully carried out the requirements of their farm and home club projects will be admitted as a sort of prize. Daily schedules emphasizing nature study and organized play will be followed, with aid of volunteer local leaders and of such organizations as the Red Cross and the Boy Scouts. Most camps will last a week.

Muskingum and Hamilton Counties have opened camps and youngsters of the following counties will bivouac during the remaining weeks of July and the early part of August: Summit, Monroe, Montgomery, Henry, Washington, Medina, and Preble.

SMITH FAVORS GOOD ROADS AND CHANGES IN PRIMARY LAWS

COLUMBUS, July 28.—That "the thinking people of Ohio would welcome a change in the primary law allowing enough of a man's record to appear upon the ballot to permit the voters to cast their ballot intelligently" is the statement made by Secretary of State Smith, in an address before the Exchange Club here today.

Secretary Smith, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, advocated that the money collected from the licensing of automobiles be "expended judiciously for a patrol system on improved highways and in favor of a road program that will get the farmer out of the mud and allow him to come to market in his automobile 12 months in the year."

"I am in favor of a change in the primary law," the secretary of state further declared, "that will impose a penalty upon the 'character assassin' who often travels under a cloak of 'holier than thou' and goes about the state in the interest of the candidate who furnished the high dollar."

Wealthy Merchant Slain; Two Held Under Suspicion

CINCINNATI, July 28 — Clayton Lewis, 30, Elora City, Tenn., and E. J. Larrison, 40, of Winchester, Ky., were taken from a freight train at Falmouth, Ky., last night, and held on suspicion in connection with the murder of Leonard Renaker, 37, wealthy produce merchant known as the "Turkey King of the World," which occurred at his home in Winchester. Renaker's body was discovered in his bedroom at noon yesterday by his wife when she returned to Winchester after visiting relatives at Covington, Ky.

The two men held at Falmouth were arrested after the police of Winchester had broadcasted a request to the neighboring Kentucky towns to watch out for two men thot to have fled from Winchester.

Renaker was last seen alive on Monday just before midnight by friends in Winchester who saw him turn up the street toward his home. He is thot to have been murdered shortly after preparing for bed and while he was still sitting up reading a newspaper.

The left side of his skull had been caved in by a heavy blow and the bed clothes were disarranged as if a struggle had taken place. The murderer wiped his hands on the curtains in the room and also left a bloody handprint on a screen door as he went out. The slain man's clothes were left undisturbed and money and jewelry in the room were not touched. Before Renker's body was found his mother received a telephone call at Cynthiana, Ky, purporting to come from a man in Covington and telling her that she should notify Renaker's wife (then on the train to Winchester, via Cynthiana) that when she arrived home, she would find her husband dead. The mother was unable to reach her daughter-in-law before she reached Winchester. Police have been unable to trace the mysterious message.

DAVID MEETS A REAL-FOR-SURE SEA UNICORN.

DAVID stood watching the queer-looking creature, half-lying, half-sitting on the stones in the water behind the wire fence. He had been to the zoo a great many times, but this was the first time he had ever found this tenant out in plain view.

The creature was about twelve feet long and had a soft velvet-like skin of yellowish white dotted with dark specks. A long twisted tooth or tusk coming from its upper jaw made it look very funny and—David lauched.

"Well!" the caged creature snorted "You think I'm funny looking, do you? You're not the only one who thinks so I'm not very proud of my looks, either, but we can't all be beautiful, you know. Still, now that I come to think of it, there must have been something attractive about me or they never would have brought me all the way down from Greenland. I don't think there are many of my relatives around in this part of the country."

"I guess that's because it is too warm for you here—if you came from the North Pole," said David. "I wish you'd please tell me who you are."

"Why, I'm Mr. Narwhal, and they claim I'm one of the most curious of the sea mammals," replied the captive. "Some folks call me a sea unicorn because of my queer-looking tusk, I guess."

"That tusk certainly makes you look vicious," David said. "Is it good for anything?"

"My goodness, yes!" laughed Mr. Sea Unicorn. "Why, the Eskimos catch us for our tusks. There was a time when my tusk would have brought a high price. Yes," he mused in drowsy fashion, "we may be queer-looking creatures, but we're useful. The Eskimos eat our flesh dried or cooked, burn the oil that comes from our bodies and make twine from our tendons and bladders from our guts—so I guess we really are worth more dead than alive. Yet with it all, I think I'd rather be alive even if folks do make fun of me, for they certainly do treat me well here.

"I'm Mr. Narwhal!"

"Why, this very day the keeper gave me a splendid dinner of cuttlefish. That's one of my favorite dishes and it certainly seems nice to get a meal without hunting for it. No, I guess I prefer living here and being laughed at, after all, than fighting for food and even air to breathe in Greenland. In my old home I have seen the ice so thick over the sea that I thought I'd never get a breath of fresh air, for although I'm a fish, I'm an air-breather—and must have air to live."

With a flip of his large tail, Mr. Narwhal ducked under the water and out of sight and David ran home to tell his mama he had seen a real-for-sure sea unicorn.

NEW FICTION IS ON RENTAL LIST AT CITY LIBRARY

A list of 15 new "best-sellers," fiction stories, which have been duplicated by the public library for rental purposes, was given out Saturday by Miss Clara Olney, librarian.

The books are released by the library upon the payment of an extra fee of two cents a day.

One addition to the regular book shelves, which will appeal to humor loving readers is "Noah, Jonah, and Cap'n John Smith." It is a book of witty doggerel, written by Don Marquis, and derives its name from the first tale in the book, which narrates three different fishing stories supposed to be told in heaven by the three above named celebrities

"How to Sell—and What," has recently been included in the list of periodicals received by the library. It is, as it name indicates, a salesman's magazine, and explains the procedure of selling everything from yourself to the other fellow.

The new list of rental books which are ready for distribution now is as follows.

Vehement Flame, by Margaret Deland.

Purple Pearl, by Anthony Pryde.

Million-Dollar Suitcase, by Alice MacGowan.

U. S. FUNDS USED IN EFFORT TO KILL LENINE, IS CHARGE

MOSCOW, July 29.—That a new plot to assassinate Nicolai Lenine, head of the Russian Soviet government, was discovered by Russian police, was revealed today by Dr. Lunarcharsky, People's commissar of education, in a speech at the conclusion of the trial of 34 socialists, charged with attempting to overthrow the communist government. Three men - Zeozvicin, Eston and Kazin—were sentenced to death. Others of the defendants were given jail sentences ranging to five years.

"The evidence in the trial of the social revolutionaries proved conclusively that the defendants attempted to murder Lenine and planned attacks against the soviet," said Dr. Lunarcharsky. "Private documents show that the defendants used the secret service code of the British government and that their expenses were paid by M. Makhmetieff, former Russian ambassador to the United States, and Alexander Kerensky, former socialist premier of Russia. It cannot be doubted that the money used against the soviet government was part of the funds borrowed from the United States by Bakhmetieff."

MILLERSBURG ITEMS GATHERED AND WIRED BY STAFF REPORTER

Fines Collected At Sugarcreek To Be Reclaimed

According to the report current here, Mayor Smith, Sugarcreek, O., Tuscarawas co, is considerably worried.

And the cause of all his worries, it is said, is just a little ordinance in Sugarcreek. And the aforesaid ordinance is not an ordinance at all but only a little ordinance in the making.

It happened thus and so: Alton Lower, 18, son of C. C. Lower, Baltic, motored thru Sugarcreek with the muffler on his car open. Out stepped the mighty arm of the law for the said Alton. But Alton bucked and refused to open his wallet and produce the fine assessed.

When the case came to trial it was discovered by the young man's attorney that the ordinance under which he was charged had been given only its first reading and had never become effective as law.

Alton's case was duly dismissed and now other autoists are threatening to journey to Sugarcreek for the pleasure of demanding that Mayor Smith refund the fines assessed against them under the same little ordinance.

Wherefore is his honor a much worried man.

Political Speakers Address Public On Millersburg Streets

Two Democratic candidates broke the limelight here today with primary work. They were John J. Lentz, Democratic seeker of the senatorial nomination and H. G. De Weese, aspirant for the state treasurer nomination.

Lentz addressed a small gathering in front of the courthouse this afternoon. His coming here is an invasion of "regulation" Pomerene territory and he was working against big odds, if sentiment is any indication.

Lentz in his speech stressed the point that he had challenged Pomerene to debate. He also denounced the buying of seats in the senate and declared that he believed that "all candidates should come before the people openly at the time of an election.

Huge Blacksnake Is Found Coiled About Telephone

When a snake, especially a blacksnake of almost five feet in length, wants to use the telephone Mrs. Lloyd Finley, who resides on a farm south of here, objects but she really doesn't press her objections, at least to the snake.

The other day she went to use the phone. Coiled about the arm of the mouthpiece was a five foot blacksnake.

Immediately Mrs. Finley changed her mind and called her husband. He was able to kill and remove the snake after a short battle.

It is believed that the snake found its way into the house thru an open cellar door.

REFUSES GOVERNOR'S REQUEST FOR PERMIT TO DIG PUBLIC COAL

INDIANAPOLIS, July 29. — John Hessler, President of the Indiana United Mine Workers of America today sent the following answer to a telegram from Gov. McCray of Indiana asking permission to mine enough coal for state and municipal institutions and public utilities:

"I regret to learn that the Indiana operators continue to repudiate contracts to meet for an interstate conference and wonder why such policy is pursued as Mr. Penna repeatedly admitted to me that such a policy was a mistake.

"The breaking off of negotiations cannot be defended and I again advise you that I am committed to a policy of four state meetings in line with agreement. As a loyal citizen and loyal to mine workers also I decline to meet contract repudiators and still hope they will change their tune and adopt a policy in line with the interest of the public welfare. I am without authority to grant the permit, which you request but will submit same to the district executive board Monday when action will be taken thereon.

"I am still hopeful a four state meeting will be held soon.

"JOHN HESSLER."

BUSINESS WILL

sudden increase in business from both wage workers and employers is quickly felt by the jobbers who in turn pour in orders upon the manufacturers.

"The immediate effect of this is to cause a temporary scarcity of goods which in many instances results in the raising of prices. Therefore, I should not be surprised to see an increase in the wholesale prices of many products this fall. In some sections of the country there will be a distinct shortage in some lines of goods. Merchants, therefore, are justified in stocking up now for fall and winter trade. Those who have contracts to fill should see that these contracts are well covered. When business is so dull, as it is at present, it is hard to believe that a few months can see a radical change in the situation. Such is possible, altho price increase may be more or less of a temporary nature. I say "temporary" because after next spurt in commodity prices there will probably be another break which will make the general price level even lower than it is at present. After this next upward movement, the general trend of commodity prices may be downward for some years to come.

"Some of the basic commodities are already showing an upward tendency. Sugar, for example, which has been such a drag on the market during the past two years, has already begun to strengthen, and people are well justified in again buying sugar by the barrel. Linseed oil is firmer. The demand has greatly improved and the outlook is very much brighter. I predict further advances for linseed and should not be surprised to see raw linseed oil sell for one dollar or over. This is the general result of the large amount of building now in progress and the consequent demand for paint. Cotton is still strengthening. The recent estimate published shows that the 1922 crop will scarcely be sufficient for the world's needs. Still higher prices for cotton may be expected. Steel prices are firm with rising cost of production and a fair increase in demand. Both coal and coke prices are strong. Pig iron is in fair demand and strong. Zinc is more active while prices are low they are firm. The same applies to tin and especially copper. Copper is sure to sell higher during this coming year following the strike settlements. The basic commodities which now look weak in the market are lead, rubber and probably petroleum. Petroleum is in a very interesting position. The market is controlled and there never was a time, even during the palmiest Standard Oil days, when the oil price situation was so under the absolute control of a few men. On the other hand, there is a tremendous amount of oil in storage and statistically the oil situation is weak. Altho I cannot get anyone to agree with me, I believe that oil is at any time liable to break in price.

"What will this mean to the stock market? It looks to me as if this would be a benefit, especially to the industrials. The clean up of the strike situation should help the whole market. However, any stocks purchased now should be selected with great discrimination, only after careful study and consultation. Statistics, however, clearly indicate that we are still in a bull market and the break of the past few weeks was only a natural action in a general upward movement which will not culminate for some months yet."

General business as reflected in the Babsonchart stands at 11 per cent below normal, an improvement of 2 per cent since last week. This week's figure marks the highest point since January 1921.

The Way Harry Underwood Tried to Impress Madge.

FROM somewhere I summoned the poise to bid Dr. Pettit a calm good morning, and in another minute there was a good mile between his tense white face and Harry Underwood's. But we traveled another mile before the man at my side spoke. I guessed that the encounter had touched him more nearly than he wished me to know, and that he was battling to recover his usual insouciant demeanor.

"Pleasant lad, Herbie," he drawled at last. "Something about him taking to the eye, so endearing, don't you know. Is he still writing sonnets to your eyebrows and emitting furnace-like sighs when you are around?"

"I was not aware that he ever—" I began frigidly when Mr. Underwood cut short my protest with an incredulous laugh, just a trifle too loud and too care-free to be wholly convincing as to its genuineness.

"This Breaks the Record."

"Don't try to draw any wool over your Uncle Dudley's eyes," he said, "for he wasn't born yesterday or even the day before. I can remember only too well when the poor old sawbones had any moon-struck calf of twenty backed off the boards. Many's the time I've refrained from kicking him only because I did so hate to disturb a good toe-polish. And so he's still pursuing you! Now, if he were only a villain like me! It's all according to Hoyle to have a villain pursue you, but when it comes to having a pie-faced—"

"Do stop talking such utter nonsense!" I exclaimed. "Dr. Pettit is madly in love with an attractive young western girl named Claire Foster. They were engaged, I think, but something, I do not know what, happened."

"Probably Claire came out from the ether," Mr. Underwood interjected.

But I paid no attention, and finished my sentence—"and he has been very down-hearted ever since."

"Well! I thought my opinion of him was as low as my mental thermometer could possibly register," he rejoined, "but this simply breaks the record. He breathed the same air that you did, and then—he fell in love with a western girl!"

I had hard work to keep back a laugh, and then I contemptuously forced something else back also—an undeniable thrill of vanity at something in his voice beneath the extravagance.

An Attempt at Flattery.

"We are coming into Bridgehampton," I said hurriedly. "One of my errands is completed, thanks to our meeting Dr. Pettit. But I have three others. Mr. Smythe-Hopkins wishes a garage mechanic sent back to his car, his butler notified to send another car down to the farm for the family, and a telegram dispatched to Dr. Y. at this address."

I took my right hand from the wheel and extracted from the pocket of my motor coat the scribbled paper Mr. Smythe-Hopkins had given me. This I held out to Mr. Underwood. When he took it he enfolded my hand also in his, as if by accident, and laughed shortly as I hurriedly removed it.

"I'm still 'bad medicine,' I see," he said with a note of bitterness.

"I do not remember that I permitted you to hold my hand when you were good medicine," I replied spiritedly.

"Sure you never wanted me to?" he asked teasingly, and I saw that he was in one of his old reckless moods. But it changed on the moment, much to my relief.

"Sorry," he said contritely. "I won't tease any more. Now, about these messages. We pass a garage in the next block which will do as well as any other, and I hope they sock it good to the Smythe-Hopkins pocketbook. As for the other messages—they can wait until we get to the house. I'll have the butler get Dr. Y. on the telephone, that will be quicker than a telegram, and he can also send the car out. So we'll save time all around. Here's the garage. You'd better talk to the man. I don't want to use this accent any more than I have to. It twists my tongue all out of shape."

We drew up at the garage, and I gave the owner directions for finding the farmhouse. And when we set off at renewed speed for Southampton, Harry Underwood settled back into his seat with an exaggerated sigh of relief.

"I only wish your father had told you to take me to San Francisco instead of Greenport," he said. "I'd ask nothing more of life!"

WHAT a contrast there is between a charming young woman who looks refreshingly cool in her dainty thin dress and shadow hat, and a young man from whom the sun exacts its tribute! YOUR HEALTH

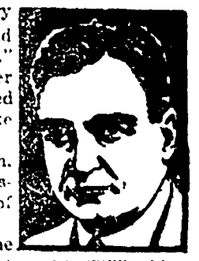
What "Phlebitis" Is and Methods of Treatment

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
Commissioner of Health, New York City



DR. COPELAND

NO matter what its form or where it is found, every tissue of the body is liable to inflammation and disease. Inflammation of a vein is called "phlebitis." The symptoms are pain and tenderness to pressure over the vessel. As the fingers are passed over the inflamed vein it is found to be hard and knotted. It feels like a piece of rope.

An exudate covers the inner lining of the vein. This may accumulate to the extent of blocking the vessel. In any case it interferes with the free passage of blood.

Because of the interference with the escape of the venous blood, and because of the exudate thrown out into the tissues around the vein, there is apt to be swelling of the limbs and other parts involved.

The trouble continues until the blocking mass is absorbed, or until the blood has found other channels through which to escape. Then the swelling and discomfort disappear.

Sometimes, however, the clot may become infected. What happens then depends on the local situation. If the vein is closed there may be a local abscess which discharges, and the trouble is ended. But if the pus gets into the blood stream it is carried throughout the body and serious results follow. It produces general blood poisoning.

A slight injury to a vein may cause phlebitis. Following child birth there may be extension of trouble to the veins. Influenza and typhoid fever occasionally have this condition as an uncomfortable complication. It may follow an operation.

What should be done for phlebitis depends on the cause and the size of the vein involved. Protection from movement and from injury is important. In a week or two the exudate absorbs and all is well.

If the trouble is in the leg, the limb is elevated, and the patient is kept quiet.

After the fever and acute symptoms have disappeared, gentle massage may be practiced. Later an elastic bandage is useful.

In the cases where pus forms an operation is required.

In all cases your family doctor should be called and the treatment will be directed by him.

Answers to Health Questions

MR. J. B. Q—I suffer from nervous and muscular pains in my spine. Will you kindly advise me what to do?

A—I would advise you to consult a physician for an examination and treatment. Give him ample time to study your case, and I believe your symptoms will disappear.

MRS. J. E. Z. Q—My baby, who is 20 months of age, cannot walk without support. Will you kindly advise me what to do?

A—The baby will walk as soon as he is able. Do not force him. Give him plenty of mashed green vegetables, stewed fruits and orange and prune juice.

M. M. Q—Will you kindly advise me whether diabetes can be cured in a person 62 years of age?

A—By dieting, diabetes can be controlled. If you care to obtain full particulars on diabetes, kindly send a self-addressed, stamped envelope, restating your question, and information will be gladly given.

ANNETTE. Q—I am a girl 18 years old and am troubled with dark circles under my eyes. Will you please tell me of a remedy for this trouble?

A—Dark circles under the eyes may be due to constipation, indigestion or kidney or eye trouble. You should have a thorough examination to determine what is causing your trouble and have it treated accordingly. If you would care for instructions on the treatment of constipation, restate your question and enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

H. F. Q—My fingers are often numb and blue and only vigorous slapping brings them back to normal. I consulted a doctor last fall concerning this condition and he states that I am slightly anemic. Would you please prescribe a remedy that will relieve my condition? I have tried so many medicines without any results.

A—You may have had your fingers frost-bitten some time and this plus anemia may be the cause of your trouble. You should remain under your doctor's care.

Dr. Copeland will answer for readers of this paper questions on medical, hygienic and sanitation subjects that are of general interest. Where the subject of a letter is such that it cannot be published in this column, Dr. Copeland will, when the question is a proper one, write you personally, if a self-addressed, stamped envelope is enclosed. WINIFRED BLACK WRITES ABOUT Mary's Garden and Martha

Copyright, 1922, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

THIS morning we all went over to see Mary's garden.

Dear me, what a garden it is—a tangle of roses, white and pink and yellow—yes, even cinnamon roses and moss-roses!

I didn't think there was a moss-rose left anywhere, except on a valentine, or an old-fashioned satin sofa pillow, but there they were in Mary's garden—just as sweet and as dewy and as fragrant as a rose ever dared to be anywhere.

Winifred Black

There were climbing roses in great clusters, fairly leaping to the top of the garden wall and waving to the passers-by, like gay hoydens all in their summer dress.

Delicate tea-roses bloomed in a quiet corner where they were well-shaded from the wind. And just exactly where it should be there was a clump of old-fashioned button-roses, yellow as gold and so fragrant that it almost hurt to smell them.

It Was a Paradise!

There were pinks, too, little old-fashioned clove pinks, with fringes around their petticoats, and pansies and pink-and-white daisies and tall fox-gloves and deep blue bachelor buttons and old-fashioned phlox—what on earth is so sweet as a hedge of phlox, white and pink? Then, yellow marigolds, sun-colored and sun-shaped, and mignonette—great clumps of it, brown and green—and blue forget-me-nots—who was the genius who named them so? And there were iris, purple and white, and pink lilies and ferns and moss, and a cherry tree hung with rubies—it was a paradise, Mary's garden!

And in the corner of it was a basket of little white kittens—a blue basket it was with a handle to it, and a string hung from the handle and the fun those kittens were having with that string!

We laughed and laughed, and Kate forgot the bad cook in the kitchen at home, and Julia forgot the bill she couldn't pay until next month, and Ann forgot the quarrel she had had with her best friend, and Rose remembered a hasty word she had said to her husband that morning and slipped away to the telephone and we all laughed at her—and some of us envied her; just a little.

And then along came Martha—she'd been to market. Oh, no, she never orders over the 'phone, she's far too efficient for that! She does her own marketing and pokes the meat and pinches the fruit and watches the packages like the good practical woman she is—they say that Martha's husband is doing wonderfully in business—and no wonder when Martha keeps the household wheels so wonderfully oiled. We all like Martha and admire her, but Martha didn't like Mary's garden.

We Need Them Both

She didn't like it at all. She didn't say so, of course—not while Mary was there. But Mary knew it and Mary laughed, and then Martha said:

"Well, what makes you have so many flowers and all in together so? Why don't you have neat beds, carefully planned and straight walks—gravel is so clean and orderly somehow—and what do you want with all these old-fashioned flowers? They take up so much room!"

And everyone was sorry for Mary, but Mary.

She was sorry for Martha.

Poor Martha with her set life run by rule and her set ideas and her regular plans—what a dull time she does have, to be sure!

But I am not sorry for either Mary or Martha.

We need them both in this world and they're both happy in their own way—and I like each in her own way, too.

I wonder what the kittens in the blue basket would say about it if they could talk.

HOME-MAKING HELPS

"Everything About the House Helps to Make the Home"

By WANDA BARTON

How to Achieve Some Charming Effects in Painted Furniture.

THE reclaiming of old furniture has become not merely the fad and pastime of the "at-home" artist, but a business of real economic value, which helps to solve the problem of fitting up the new home without having the furnishings seem like "hand-me-downs" from Mother's attic. The reclaimed pieces of furniture are, if well selected and of rare and attractive shape, much more artistic than some of the cheap, present-day offerings.

Second-hand shops often boast pieces of furniture in past periods from homes sold out. Some things may have been brought from homes abroad when household goods entered port with little or no duty because they were to be used in homes upon arrival. Much of this sort of furniture which antique dealers have gathered is prohibitive in price for young people starting their first household venture, but still there are bargains if one is willing to dig for them.

Many years of doing over may have destroyed the fine lines of old pieces that are carved and bevelled, in which case they must be thoroughly renovated. To do this, paint the entire surface with a liquid paint and varnish remover, applying it with a soft brush, so that it gets into all the crevices. Let this mixture remain on the furniture for a little while, then with a painter's spatula remove the surface finish, being very careful not to splinter or dig into the woodwork. After the finish is removed and all carvings are distinct, wash down the entire piece of furniture with lukewarm water and white soap, drying it off with soft cloths. If any little bits of the mixture are left on they may be removed with sandpaper. When dry, put over all a coat of shellac, being careful that it is not too thick. Allow this to thoroughly dry. Before adding the shellac is the time for any repairing which may be needed. This is a cabinet-maker's work. Drawers that do not close or drawers that close unevenly should be repaired or they will become a nuisance later on. New knobs and castors, carefully selected, may also be an improvement.

Preliminaries over, the business of decorating may begin.

A young Hungarian, an expert cabinet-worker and carver, about to marry, picked up a charming old highboy, a lowboy and a long, colonial sideboard at an auction, then set to work and made a long refectory table and chairs to match. He shellacked the new and prepared the old pieces, painted them all a charming shade of old blue, and decorated them in brilliantly-colored designs of native selection. The table received a two-inch border, a large ornament in the centre and a smaller one at either end. The same border was repeated on the other pieces, making a wonderfully-striking set. Over the sideboard a large rectangular glass, framed to match the furniture, was placed against the corn-colored wall. Odd pieces of Hungarian blue and ivory pottery, decorated in gay but charmingly-blended colors, decorated the room.

Another collected and matched-up set was done in pale yellow ground-color with Russian stencil work in strong coloring for decoration. The stencil designs were bold in motif in diamond-shaped arabesques with broad-stroked rays or reflections that were very effective. Stencil work must be done well to be correct. There are a number of different ways of doing it, but the main thing is to have the stencil clean cut and to be careful in applying the paints.

The final touch is generally enamel, put on after the painting is all dry, and it must be applied on a dry day in a room of cool and dry atmosphere to give the desired gloss.

Unless the finish of the old furniture is badly damaged it is, of course, unnecessary to do it over in the way described, but in any case the better it is prepared for the paint the better the results are when it is finished. Many home artists do all of the heavy work outdoors on the back porch, if they are lucky enough to own one, then bring the pieces indoors for the artistic finishing touches.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By ANNIE LAURIE

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl going with a young man five years my senior, and I love him very dearly. I was engaged to him once, but we had a quarrel over another young man he said I liked better than I liked him. I like the young man I was engaged to the best of all men, but I gave him back his ring.

But he has been calling on me lately, and still we quarrel, because he gets mad over jokes. He tells me he loves me, but since we had our last quarrel he hasn't been to see me.

Should I write and invite him to call or wait until he asks?

DIMPLES.

DIMPLES: If you care for the young man ask him to call on you, but determine that you will not quarrel with him again. Remember it takes two to make a quarrel, my dear.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

Will you tell me how to make men fall in love with you? All my life I've had lots of boy and men friends, but they don't fall head over heels in love with me like they do with my friends. My friends aren't any prettier than I am, I'm sure, but they do allow the men to kiss them, and I do not. Several men have stopped calling on me because I refused to kiss them.

Please tell me what to do. I don't want to be an old maid, but naturally want men to love me instead of merely liking me in a friendly way all my life. Do you think one's dignified keeps a man on merely friendly terms?

HOPEFUL.

HOPELESS: Maintain your dignity and you will not only have the respect of the men whom you know, but will hold the respect of the man who will want you for his wife.

There is no way of making a man fall in love with you, my dear, and the men who give up your friendship because you will not allow them to kiss you are not worthy of your friendship.

Keep on as you are and some day you will find a really fine man who will cherish you for the splendid, dignified way in which you have conducted yourself.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of about 17, and have been going with a young man for nearly three years. I have just found out lately from my girl friends that he has been going to see another girl, and has been places with her. As I have not seen them together, I don't wish to say anything to him for fear it may not be true.

Will you please advise me what to do?

BETTY.

BETTY: What is there for you to do, my dear? You are not engaged to the young man, and have no right to try to regulate his life or his friends. You are too young to be engaged. Why don't you have other friends and leave love until the future, dear?

Annie Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. Letters to Miss Laurie should be addressed to her, in care of this office.

Diary of a Fashion Model

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

She Chats About a Novel Frock of Linen and Cretonne.

MRS. SHERWOOD, one of Madame's long-standing customers, came in and Madame advanced to meet her.

"It's a surprise to see you in the city this warm day," Madame said. "Something important must have enticed you up from that lovely summer place."

"Yes," Mrs. Sherwood said with a smile. "I had to come on business, and as long as I'm here I've decided that I shall reward myself for my labors."

"That's a very nice plan to work on," Madame agreed.

"The nicest reward I could imagine is a spick-and-span new frock," Mrs. Sherwood continued. "So here I am."

"Then I shall do my very best to help you," said Madame. "What type of frock have you in mind, or do you want me to show you the newest I have and let you choose something at random?"

"Well, some of the smartest people on the shore have cretonne dresses," Mrs. Sherwood said. "I didn't consider one when planning my summer wardrobe, but Mr. Sherwood admires them and wants me to get one."

"They are attractive on the right person," Madame agreed. "I think you would be lovely in one."

"The thing is this," said Mrs. Sherwood. "I want something different from the others, of course. It's rather difficult to get a cretonne frock and still have it differ from all the rest, but I know you can help me. I'm placing it in your hands."

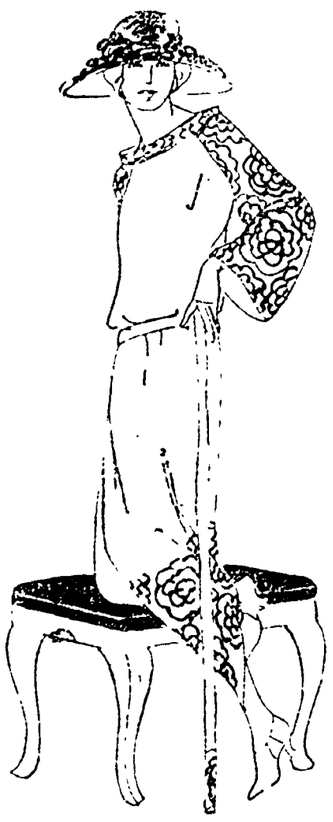
"Then I'm sure I can take care of you," said Madame. "Now, frocks that use cretonne with another material are really newer than the all-cretonne ones. How does that appeal to you?"

"I should like to see one," was her reply.

"Germaine, get the new oyster-white linen, and have one of the girls put it on," Madame directed the saleslady, and seated herself to chat with Mrs. Sherwood.

Presently, Pam came in wearing the most adorable frock. It had just come from the work-room, and was as new to me as it was to Mrs. Sherwood.

"Simply stunning!" Mrs. Sherwood exclaimed.



Oyster-White Linen and Gay Cretonne Are Effectively Combined in This One-Piece Dress.

"I think that black-and-red cretonne is very smart with the oyster-white linen, don't you?" Madame asked.

"Yes, it's really more effective than a frock entirely of cretonne," Mrs. Sherwood agreed. "The oyster-white plays up the red and black admirably."

"Of course, there have been frocks using the cretonne simply as an appliqué," Madame said. "But this idea of using it in solid bands is my own."

"I shall feel very satisfied," said Mrs. Sherwood. "And I've always wanted one of those cunning upstanding collars since I saw one on a yellow smock at a Greenwich Village fashion show."

"Come, let's have you fitted," said Madame, leading the way to one of the gray-and-silver fitting-rooms.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

SUNDAY AND MONDAY, JULY 30-31.

Sunday's horoscope is rather unpromising for sordid affairs, as the occult Uranus is dominant. This encourages research into the metaphysical realm, and turns the energies inward. The stellar seers declare it best to remain quiet and to avoid disputes.

Those whose birthday it is have the forecast of an uncertain year. They should remain quiet and avoid every possibility of dispute. A child born on this day may be prone to be restless and unsettled unless well-trained in early life.

Monday's astrological map holds conflicting figures. While there may be sudden and radical changes, removals or journeys, which may eventuate profitably, yet those in the employment of others are urged to be careful, and all should administer their affairs cautiously.

Those whose birthday it is have a presage of an important change, with possible travel for some, which should prove of benefit. A child born on this day, although it may be disposed to be restless and fond of change unless carefully trained, will be successful if careful in business affairs.

AMERICA

once made her position plain; and if America at last is satisfied it can only mean that its position has been conceded by the other powers.

In order to understand just what has happened it is necessary to take our minds back to the beginnings of the Paris conference. Mr. Wilson (whatever his errors may have been about the concept of the League of Nations) went to that table determined that the Imperial nations should not take advantage of the victory over Germany to imitate that grasping country and take whatever territory might be lying around loose.

All the imperial nations, regardless of their horror over German rapacity, tried to grab. Britain was to make secure her Cairo and Cape of Good Hope railroad by getting possession of most of the German colonies in Africa. France was to take other African possessions. Turkey was to be divided up, the German possessions in the Pacific territory were to be parcelled out.

Tried to Trick Wilson

Upon such schemes Mr. Wilson put down his foot from the first. He held that no nation had the right to assert exclusive privileges over any backward land. To satisfy him — and also to trick him the imperialists got behind the doctrine of mandates. This was a device to turn over to the various nations portions of the conquered lands to be administered under the supervision of the Council of the League of Nations. From what has been done since it is evident that the adventuring empires calculated they would be able to see to it that the council's supervision in no way interferred with their plans for exploitation.

It is known Mr. Wilson felt that the influence and vote of the United States as a member of the league council could have been used to prevent the consummation of the annexation plans. After the Senate refused to ratify the Treaty of Versailles, however, the imperialists found a large gram of comfort in the thot that, whatever disastrous consequences might flow from our refusal to join them, at least we were barred from interfering with the division of the swag.

They proceeded on that theory. In the first meeting of the league council the forms of mandates were presented; and they proved to be thinly disguised charters of annexation. Also Britain put forward a resolution providing that a majority of the members of the Permanent commission having charge of the mandates should be members from the mandatory powers—thus insuring that the Empires should be in control.

American Policy Laid Down

That was in the Autumn of 1920. It was intended to settle matters right then and there. It was believed that Mr. Wilson, having been defeated by the Senate, would sulkily "let nature take its course." Instead, his own plan having been defeated, he turned to the old American policy of the "open door" -the idea that had its first expression in the Monroe Doctrine barring the empires from Latin America and its second expression in the Hay Doctrine designed to prevent division of China among the empires. It was not a partisan idea, but an American idea.

Just as the league was about to take up the mandates, Secretary of State Colby laid down what might be called the Wilson Doctrine. How truly American and non-partisan it was is proved by the action of Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes in pressing it just as it was put forth. Mr. Colby put it thus:

"Such powers as the allied and associated nations may enjoy or wield in the determination of the governmental status of the mandated areas accrued to them as the direct result of the war against the Central Powers. The United States, as a participator in that conflict and as a contributor to its successful issue, cannot consider any of the associated powers, the smallest not less than itself, debarred from the discussion of any of its consequences or from participation in the rights and privileges secured under the mandates provided for in the Treaty of Peace."

That note was not addressed to the league. It purported to be an answer to British claims for priority of rights in the oil lands of Mesopotamia and Palestine. But it served the purpose. The whole subject of the mandates was help up and it has only now come to a head in the meeting of the League Council in London.

Japan First to Give Way

The issue thus raised was one between the imperial idea and the democratic idea. The imperialists, as far back as history records, have held that conquest gave title. Britain and France for four centuries had been engaged in a race to see which should get the largest share of the earth's surface and peoples out of the grab bag. Russia, Germany, Japan, Italy and others had taken active parts in the game. It was not until the United States laid down its principle of equality of peoples and their right to make their own form of government that the imperial idea was challenged.

Every art of imperial diplomacy was used to defeat our purpose. In the files of our State department are some firm notes written by Lord Curzon over a space of more than a year taking issue with our viewpoint and insisting that the "rights" of the British in the conquered lands should be recognized, while in the British archives are equally firm and contrary notes from our own State department. Other exchanges were had with Paris and Tokio.

It was not until the Washington Arms Conference, early in this year, that the first break in the imperial line up came. Japan, isolated by the cancellation of the alliance with Great Britain, decided it would be well to make friends with the United States. She yielded on the dispute over the island of Yap and then "went the whole hog" and conceded our demand for equal rights in all the islands in the north Pacific over which she had taken a mandate.

I predicted at the time that this surrender by Japan would mean the complete downfall of the imperial combination, for, having given way on her own account, Japan was bound to join with the United States in opening up the other territories taken from Germany.

Great Opportunity For America

We are not yet privileged to know just what course of events brot about the decision of the British and French to concede the American viewpoint. We can only guess that something big has been stirring in the chancelleries, especially when this victory for American policy follows so swiftly upon the British concession of liability for the war debts owed to us and the French desire to reach an accord on that subject. It is evident that European statesmanship has concluded the time has arrived to satisfy America. It is probable we shall be assailed with a fresh campaign calling upon us to do something magnificent in return, but that is in the future while we have concrete results right now.

Vast opportunities for America's democratic policy are presented by the new conditions to be established under the revised mandates. In all the territory taken from Germany none of the imperial powers will have the right to deny us a voice. All their acts will be subject to our scrutiny and any attempt to favor their own nationals will be open to objection by us. It is undoubtedly true the imperialists will largely have their way, for the time being a least, but in the future will come chances to assert our viewpoint. If there should be a rebellion, for instance,in some of the territories taken over by the mandatories we would have the right to a say in the methods to be used in putting it down. If there should be another war we would be in position to insist that the mandated areas should not be made battle-ground and should not be regarded as spoils for the conqueror.

It is not necessary that we should go to war to uphold any such idea. We have never had to go to war on account of the Monroe Doctrine. We have not had to take up arms for the Hay Doctrine. Yet each of them has won its way and become the supreme law affecting the territories to which it is applied. With the tremendously increased moral and physical force of this country the Wilson Doctrine will be found to be equally effective in the future.

Germany declared she had to go to war to secure her "place in the sun." We are securing our place and a place for the other democratic peoples of the earth, by the use of moral force.

EMBARGO DECLARED ON N. & W. RAILWAY

NORFOLK, Va., July 28.—The Norfolk and Western railroad has declared an embargo on all freight except coal and foodstuffs, effective immediately, it was learned here today. This action was taken under provisions of the interstate commerce commission order to give priority to movement of coal on railroads engaged largely in that class of traffic. The embargo is expected to seriously affect export shipments from this port.

This is the first serious blow directed at export shipping since the rail strike began July 1. The Norfolk and Western is extensively involved in the transportation of freight aside from coal.

WOMAN SPEEDS AWAY FROM ACCIDENT SCENE DESERTING INJURED

DAYTON, O., July 28. — Police authorities today are searching for two women in a large sedan who ran away after crashing into and wrecking the car driven by John Ross of Columbus, which contained Mrs. Ross and her two babies. After the crash the driver of the sedan sped away leaving the four victims pinned under the overturned car. A passing autoist arrived soon after the accident and brot all four to the hospital.

Mrs. Ross is seriously injured. The two babies altho hurt will recover. Ross escaped with slight injuries.

Sweeping Changes Made In Tariff

WASHINGTON, July 28. — Confronted by continued opposition to the pending tariff bill Republican members of the senate finance committee once more made sweeping changes yesterday in some of its more important provisions in an avowed effort to expedite final consideration. The silk schedule was written so as to eliminate five pages of specific duties on silk products and to substitute a blanket ad valorem rate of 55 per cent on woven fabrics composed wholly or in chief value of silk not specifically provided for.

To Rebuild Brooklyn Bridge and Construct Another Over Hudson

NEW YORK, July 29—Grover A. Whalen, commissioner of plants and structures, in a letter to Mayor Hylan today announced his intention of recommending a special meeting of the board of estimates at an early date to consider the question of rebuilding Brooklyn bridge and the construction of another bridge between Manhattan and Brooklyn.

At the same time the revelation was made that one of the great cables supporting Brooklyn bridge had stretched, weakening a span. This explained why all but horse drawn vehicles were recently barred from the traffic runways. Commissioner Whalen said that municipal engineers have pronounced the bridge absolutely safe at the present time, but strongly recommends against overburdening the structure in the future.

Brooklyn bridge will be forty years old in 1923. During the space of its existence it has carried a burden for which it was never intended. Trolly and elevated railways traffic over Brooklyn Bridge is being continued in its normal volume.

A Safe Topic

WASHINGTON, July 29. — Condemning lynching as "a monstrous evil" which is "a disgrace to the nation" a minority report submitted to the senate this afternoon, by Senator Shortridge, Republican, of California, from the senate judiciary committee, declared the pending anti-lynching bill as amended to be constitutional and said it should be passed as a "shield of protection to every American citizen."

THEODOSIA

By AGNES G. BROGAN

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

When Theodosia came in, I looked apprehensively toward our stepmother. I knew Dosie well, and the flush of her cheek and the sparkle of her eye spoke excitement and adventure.

My sister has ever walked a charmed way; if, when a mere child, Dosie started out upon some prosy errand, it would be sure to turn into a delightful hour of adventure.

When our father unexpectedly—and we thought unfortunately—married again, it seemed that there were to be no more delightful hours for either of us.

You have read of the old-time proverbial stepmother? Well, ours was that kind.

Dosie, I knew at once, would not be dominated, even if she had to resort to diplomacy to avoid it. So, for me, life became a mediocre affair between my good, but sadly influenced father and my lovely, willful little sister.

Theodosia plumped herself into a chair, and smiled her cherubic smile.

"Where?" demanded our stepmother, "have you been?"

"I was walking down Linden avenue," began Dosie, "when I met Ora Armour. She asked me to walk with them—Douglas Stewart was with her."

"I thought so," our stepmother's tone was acid. That she objected to Douglas Stewart as Dosie's suitor most unreasonably, or that she objected to suitors in general for either of us, was well known.

"You met him by appointment, I suppose?"

"No," Dosie replied, "it just happened."

I glanced up apprehensively at my sister's next remark.

"Ora and Douglas were going to a wedding—a church wedding, and I consented to go with them."

Stepmother raised her hands in horror. "Don't tell me, Theodosia Warren, that you actually went to a church wedding in a pink cambric dress?"

"I did," Dosie confessed.

"And Ora—"

"Ora went home to put on her white crepe," Dosie admitted, "but you see, Ora was to be bridesmaid; she gave me half of her bouquet. It was beautiful, pink roses. The wedding was a very small affair. Douglas and Will Herron wore afternoon attire, because they were going on to the reception at Ora's afterward."

My little sister's eyes grew softly reminiscent. "It was a beautiful marriage. Phyllis, my one regret was that you were not there; but you see, I just happened to be there, myself."

"That's all right, dear," I assured her.

"I, for one," stepmother said severely, "am dismayed, Theodosia, that you were there."

"The light," went on my sister dreamily, "shone through the golden glass of the church window, in the loveliest solemn way, and the bridegroom's face looked almost saintly, his eyes so dark, his face so white."

"Who," stepmother inquired, "was the groom?"

Dosie answered slowly, "Douglas Stewart."

Stepmother leaned forward with a start. There was relief, and a not pleasing triumph, on her face.

"So," she said, "it was Douglas Stewart who was married. I don't wonder that you avoided telling us that in the first place. You realize now that I spoke the truth when I told your father that he was merely amusing himself, in flirtation with you. I hope you are well cured of your folly, Theodosia. Whom did you say he married?"

Dosie smoothed the folds of her cambric frock.

"Me," she answered succinctly.

Stepmother almost screamed. "What! Theodosia Warren," she cried.

"He begged me to settle things up, as we walked along," Dosie explained, "and Ora added her persuasions to his. So, while she went to put on her white dress, Douglas, Will and I got the license. The old minister who married us was a dear—he's a friend of father's."

She turned to me, with a little mute plea for forgiveness. "Phil, dearest," she begged, "get into your prettiest dress, and come to the reception that Ora is giving for me."

She looked back at our stepmother. "You may come too, if you like," she added graciously. Stepmother arose quickly. I knew that she was glad of the chance to show her new finery in big Armour house. "I suppose it would appear better, and help to silence discussion," she remarked, as she went up the stairs.

I bent to kiss my little sister. I was seeing a picture of the small Dosia clad in her pink cambric frock—the roses in her arms, the golden light of the church window glorifying her face.

"Phil," she whispered, "I want only beautiful things to happen for you hereafter."

Valuable Asset.

"How many in your family?" asked the census taker.

"Nine dawgs, fourteen chillun an' the old woman," answered the resident of Squirrel Hollow.

"Dogs don't count."

"They do in these here parts, stranger. Chillun come an' chillun go, an' a wife is sorter wished on a man, but as long as the mountains are full of possums an' coons, dawgs is dawgs."

For Writers to Ponder Over.

No commonplace is ever effectually got rid of, except by essentially emptying one's self of it into a book; for once trapped into a book, then the book can be put into the fire and all will be well.—Herman Melville.

FRAT LEAGUE BRIEFS

The Eagles are busy re-organizing their team to comply with a ruling of the League Directors which will allow them to add four men who are not members of the organization to their eligible list to replace men who are leaving town or are unable to finish the season.

The result of the shake-up in the Elks team was noticeable in the game with the K. of P.'s on Thursday evening and no team in the league has shown better team work than did the "Bills" on this occasion.

The fans are looking forward to the game on Tuesday evening when the Elks meet the Red Men. Many think that the Elks will defeat the Indian brothers.

The regular meeting of the directors of the league is scheduled for Thursday night, August 3, at 7:30. It is requested that all directors be present as important matters are to come before this meeting.

By adding Jim Cramblett to their staff the Elks have four good pitchers —Hagans, Cramblett, Davis, and Gillen.

As the Regulars will use the diamond on Thursday evening, the Moose and K. of C.'s will meet on Wednesday evening for their third and last game of the season.

The game between the Red Men and Eagles which was postponed from July 11 will be played on Friday evening. This will be the second time these teams have clashed, the Red Men being the winners in the first contest.

The week's schedule follows:
Monday—Eagles-K. P.
Tuesday—Red Men-Elks.
Wednesday—Moose-K. C.
Friday—Red Men-Eagles. (Postponed game.)

Do One Thing Well

By MYRA C. LANE

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

"I hate to fire a girl," said Haskins, the general manager, "but that little Miss McAvoy is the least competent typist in the place. I don't know what to do with her.

"There must be something she can do, and I hate to break our policy of seeing that the square peg fits the square hole. See if you can put her in another department, Mr. Claridge."

Jim Claridge, the assistant manager, was a young man of thirty. He had been promoted from the ranks because of exceptional ability. He shared his chief's views. He had a talk with Miss McAvoy that afternoon.

"Miss McAvoy," he said, "the chief thinks you might do better in another department. You haven't really had much experience as a stenographer, have you?"

"N-no," said Miss McAvoy in a quavering voice, looking up at him through two tear filled eyes. "I—I try to do my best."

Mr. Claridge felt a touch of pity at the sight of the forlorn little figure.

"Well, we'll put you with Mr. Turner, folding circulars, at the same salary," he said.

A week later Mr. Turner came to him. "Say, that little Miss McAvoy's all right in certain respects," he said. "I'me little lady, but a bum folder. She doesn't seem able to fold straight. And she only does half the work the other girls do."

"Oh, well, she'll have to go," said Mr. Claridge. He went to interview Miss McAvoy, who looked up at him with streaming cheeks.

"I know I'm no use," she said. "You'll have to get rid of me, I can see that."

Mr. Claridge couldn't help reflecting how nice Miss McAvoy would look eating beside him in a fashionable restaurant. She had such stunning eyes, and looked such a lady.

"Well—suppose we try you in our sales department, Miss McAvoy," he said. "We'll put you with Mr. Reese, and you can start at the same salary as you're getting now. Cheer up, Miss McAvoy," he added. "I'm sure you'll do well in charge of the card index files."

A few days later Mr. Reese came to Mr. Claridge.

"See here," he said, "you understand that I've not a thing against that Miss McAvoy personally—not a thing, no, sir. The question is, do you or do you not want our sales list balled up with our cost list? If you do—all right. If not—send along someone else."

"This time I'm through with her," said Mr. Claridge to himself. But when he found little Miss McAvoy waiting for him, and sobbing convulsively into a delicately scented little handkerchief, his heart failed him, and all he could think was how nice she would look sitting on the opposite side of his gas fireplace in his desolate new flat on Riverside Drive.

"I don't wait to fire me. I'm going now," sobbed Miss McAvoy.

"What's your hurry?" asked Mr. Claridge, "I was just wondering whether you wouldn't like to take charge of our waiting-room instead of messing with these old index files. If so, you could start in tomorrow morning at the same salary."

Miss McAvoy was a perfect picture of deportment in her new job. Ten days elapsed, and Mr. Claridge began to think he had fitted her into the right hole at last. Then Mr. Haskins sent for him.

"See here," he bawled, "that fool you've put in charge of the waiting-room will have to go. Know what she's done? Refused admission to old Peter Crabhouse—our best customer, with whom we're negotiating that half-million dollar sale, and told him he'd have to make an appointment! Peter Crabhouse! Gosh, it was a hard job smoothing him down after that! And let in that infernal bore Louis Monk, who wants to sell us his perpetual motion patent, when I told her I was always engaged whenever he called."

"She'll have to go," said Mr. Claridge. "I'll see to it."

He found Miss McAvoy in the waiting room alone, dissolved in tears.

"I know I'm useless," she wept. "I can't do anything. I'm on my way out now. Never mind my salary."

Mr. Claridge had an intense desire to take her in his arms. "Surely there's one thing you can do," he urged her. "Tell me what it is, and you shall have the job. What can you do?"

"I can't do anything except—make pies," Miss McAvoy sobbed.

Mr. Claridge took her by the hands and gazed earnestly into her eyes. "Won't you make pies for me, darling?" he asked softly.

Norwegians Natural Whalers.

The Norwegians seem to be peculiarly suited for the industry of whaling. Coming from a race inured by centuries of fishing and seafaring to the rigors of an ill-disposed clime, they seem to look upon the trip as a marvelous adventure. The perils of shipwreck upon the floating ice, the chase of the whale and the sheer pleasure of triumphing over the inimical forces of nature seem to provide them with a tang and zest that once in the blood can never be eradicated. On the return trip in the early summer 90 per cent of the men talk about staying in their cottage in Norway, but the autumn always finds them eager and impatient to go adventuring.

SPECIAL CAR TOURING THE COUNTRY IS COMING TO COSHOCTON

What promises to be one of the most interesting and entertaining exhibitions especially for kiddies, is coming to this city on August 3.

The A. C. Gilbert Company of New Haven is sending out a special railroad car on a three-year tour of the country. It is now on the first stage of its transcontinental tour. A railroad coach has been transformed into a veritable "palace of toys on wheels." Painted in bright yellow and red with a green roof, it carries two folding flag poles holding wireless antenna and suspended between the poles are strings of flags and bunting which gives the car much the appearance of the flag ship of a battle fleet.

Entering the car is similar to entering a Pullman coach. The narrow aisle leads to the wonderful display of educational toys and games, with wonderful operating models. At one end is a wireless receiving station with a large amplifier that picks up concerts from sending stations hundreds of miles away and broadcasts them so that everyone of the visitors to the car may hear them.

The car is complete in every detail. In addition to the large display it has a complete fitted sleeping compartment for the men in charge of the car as well as an office and lounging room for visitors.

Included among the educational toys are outfits based on the science of physics from its most fundamental stages to some of its most complicated experiments edveloped and presented in such a way that they furnish an immense amount of fun to boys of all ages.

Besides the large variety of toys and games for both boys and girls which the car carries, it also contains a number of electrical specialties for household use of interest to both men and women.

No goods are sold on the car. The exhibit is entirely free and tickets can be secured from local dealers:

ATTEMPT TO RE-OPEN PENNSYLVANIA MINES IS A FLAT FAILURE

WASHINGTON, Pennsylvania, July 29—The end today of the first week of attempted resumption of operations in the strike tied-up union mines in the southwestern Pennsylvania soft coal region, found only four cars filled.

No increase in tonnage of coal mined at Montour mine No. 4 first to be re-opened, or at Meadersonville, is reported. At Montour mine No. 4, preparations were being made by the Pittsburg Coal Co. today to evict the families of seventy-six striking miners from "company houses" either tomorrow or Monday. Rev. J. J. Hughes, pastor of the Catholic church at Hills Station, has thrown open the church to house some of the evicted miners.

No mines were reported re-opened today. Joseph Kruzy, 52, of Denbo, one of the many alleged snipers, whose activities have kept state police, guardsmen and deputy sheriffs busy, is in the Washington-co jail today in a badly battered condition. He is held for illegal possession of weapons.

NELLIE WOMAN DIES SATURDAY EVENING

Miss Maude McNabb, aged 51, died at her home in Nellie Saturday evening at 9 30 from diabetes. She had been in ill health for several weeks, but had been critically ill only two days.

No funeral arrangements had been made late Saturday night.

Tipperary Faces Starvation; Food Is Commandeered

LONDON, July 29—The town of Tipperary, Ireland, which is controlled by the irregulars, or Republican forces, is facing starvation, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch received here this afternoon.

Factories and shops are closing down and the irregulars have resorted to commandeering of foodstuffs and funds from the banks. There is some looting.

FREE STATERS TURN DOWN REPUBLICANS' PEACE COMPROMISE

DUBLIN, July 29. Proposals for an armistice forwarded by the Republican rebels at Cork were rejected today by the Irish Free State government. Dublin officials said there must "be no peace by compromise" that might lead to future warfare. It was announced that the western push of Free State troops, under General Owen O'Duffy, continues successfully.

Provinces Control Wheat

WINNIPEG, Man., July 29.—Control of all wheat raised in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan soon will be vested in the hands of the governments of these provinces, it was believed today. Saskatchewan already has passed a wheat control bill and similar bill in the Alberta legislature has reached its third reading.

It is expected the bill will be finally passed Monday.

The Unwritten Law

By HUBERT RAY

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

"Do you believe in the unwritten law?"

"I do not. I believe in the law of the land, and I intend to do my part in enforcing it."

The prosecuting attorney beamed, the judge sighed gratefully. Ten jurors had been dismissed because they would not give a satisfactory answer to the question. The defendant's counsel also beamed, though the juror's answer had been damaging to his client's chances.

"And above all, gentlemen, you will remember, that the unwritten law plays no part in the jurisprudence of this country."

The prosecuting attorney wiped his forehead and sat down. Mrs. Ellice, in the dock, wiped her eyes with her little handkerchief. She had killed her husband in cold blood because of another woman. He had been a brute. He had mistreated her. There seemed no way in which she could escape the penalty which the law enforces impartially upon men and women who take life. Mrs. Ellice would undoubtedly go to the electric chair. Never was there a clearer case.

The defending counsel did not plead the unwritten law at all. What was the use? Every one knew that it was played out. Too many women had killed. Law must be enforced. A life for a life.

He had a different defense. Mrs. Ellice, it appeared, according to her own statement, had a twin sister. The twins were devoted to each other. Her sister, learning of her wrongs, had visited the flat and shot her husband.

Had anybody seen the twin? No, unfortunately she always passed for Mrs. Ellice. They had been estranged for years and never met.

Ha! Then why had her sister avenged her wrongs? Why could not evidence be brought to prove the existence of this mythical sister? The jurors smiled. It was pretty thin. It was ridiculous. Surely the defending counsel could have thought of a better line of defense than that!

Yet he was one of the leaders of the criminal bar. Well, the wisest men make mistakes sometimes. He had underestimated the intelligence of the jury. So Mrs. Ellice had to go to the chair.

The judge was speaking. "Gentlemen, you will acquit your minds of all sentiment and remember that the laws of this country must be upheld. You will deliver your verdict in accordance with the evidence."

The jury were in their room. "Well, gentlemen," said the foreman, "suppose we begin by taking a ballot."

They balloted, each handing his opinion to the foreman, who opened each paper and smiled as he thrust it into his pocket. "Of course we are all decided that the unwritten law shall play no part in our deliberations," he said. "Now, about this twin sister—"

The jury were coming into court. The verdict was a foregone conclusion. They were all hard-headed men, business and professional. Yet there was a shade of anxiety on the judge's face, all eyes turned toward the steps that led up to the dock.

Mrs. Ellice was coming up between two guards. She was a little, fair-haired woman, with tiny hands and feet. It seemed incredible that that little hand could have committed murder. She was very brave, very calm.

"Damn the law!" shouted a man in the courtroom.

The judge nodded to the deputy sheriff, who removed the man. Mrs. Ellice was crying quietly into her handkerchief. She swayed. One of the guards supported her.

The members of the jury were looking at her. A buzz ran through the courtroom. Condemnation was on their brows. She had taken a life. There was no room for sentimentality.

"Gentlemen, are you agreed upon your verdict? Do you find that the prisoner, Madge Ellice, is guilty or not guilty of the murder of—?"

"Not guilty," said the foreman.

Cheers ran through the courtroom. The defending counsel tugged at his collar and smiled. He had avoided disaster to his future by the narrowest squeak. The prosecuting attorney smiled and nodded. Strange how calmly he took it. The shade of anxiety on the judge's face disappeared. He was smiling. He looked like a happy man. Perhaps he really believed in the twin sister.

Mrs. Ellice was recovering from her swoon. She came to just in time to shake hands with the jurymen.

Like Roads of Ancient Egypt.

The stone or macadam road, which was such a favorite until recently, is not new to our civilization. We are told that explorers in Egypt, endeavoring to find out how the ancient Egyptians were able to build the Pyramids were astounded at the remains of roads discovered.

"These roads were constructed originally very much as our roads are built today," says Doctor Fisher of the University of Pennsylvania. "The right of way was leveled; the large stones were packed in. On top of these were placed layers of stones gradually diminishing in size until the finely ground stone of the surfacing was placed. This was wetted and pounded, probably by hand, until the top presented a smooth surface."

DUBLIN, July 29 — Free State troops have captured Tubbercurry and Bruree from the irregulars, taking many prisoners, said an army communication made public here today.

The rebels holding Tubbercurry offered no resistence. In addition to the prisoners taken at that place the Free Staters seized a large quantity of ammunition.

Developments at Cork are obscure, owing to the censorship. Further attempts today to confirm the American report that Eamonn de Valera has sailed secretly for an American port were fruitless. It is learned that De Valera was seen as late as Thursday at irregular headquarters at Carrick on Suir. Previously there had been no conflicting reports as to the whereabout of the Republican leader.
